Lalhmingliana Saiawi hi thawnthu ziak mi tia sawi a ni deuh ber a, a kutchhuak dang article leh essay \ha tak tak pawh a awm nual a, mahse thawnthu puitling bu eng emaw zat a ziah avangin novelist tia sawi hi a inhmeh ber a ni. A ziaktu hian fiction chungchangah ngaihdan nghet tak a nei a, chu a ngaihdan chu miin an hmuh thiampui lo nia a hriat avangin a lehkhabu Lungrang Laiawrha, 3rd Edition-ah thu belh angin a ziak ta nghe nghe a. Chu a ngaihdan chu thu leh hla chungchanga mi hrang hrang ngaihdan nen inmil lo lai pawh a awm a ni thei e. Fiction chungchang sawina hrang hrang i han tar chhuak hmasa phawt teh ang.

B.Prasad chuan, “A novel, like a play, has a plot, and to a great extent its characters reveal themselves and their intentions in dialogue.” (Background To The Study of Literature 194) tiin a sawi a; chu chu duhtawk mai lovin, “In the novels, the tendency has been to subordinate action to psychology, to find the central theme in the mental and spiritual development of the characters rather than in their physical adventures.” (Ibid. 195) tiin a sawi zawm leh bawk a. R.J.Rees chuan ti hian a sawi ve thung a: “A fictitious prose narrative of considerable length in which characters and actions representative of real life are portrayed in a plot of more or less complexity.” (*English Literature*106). Heti ang hi a nih zel avangin, novel nihphung hi thil chi khat chauh hmanga sawi fiah fai vek theih ni pawhin a lang lo a ni.

R.Lallianzuala pawhin a chi danga sawi ve lehin, “The novel is not a transcript of life, to be judged by its exactitude; but a simplification of some side or point of life, to stand on exactitude but by its significant simplicity,” a ti a. Novel sawi dan chi hrang hrang khaikhawm tumin, “The interpretation of human life by means of fictitious narrative in prose. The object of the novel is human life.” (*Rudiments of Literature*161) a ti leh bawk. Heti ang hi a nih avangin, novel hi sawi fiah a harsa a, mi pahnih khat hrilhfiahna ringawt chu rin theih a nih loh bakah, a kalhmang danglam \hin avangin awmze thar pawh a nei ve thei zel niin a lang a. ## Summary of the stories

Lungrang Laiawrha

The narrative begins in a remote little village of Saihum where Chhuahthangi, brought up in a well-to-do family, is the most popular and handsomest maiden. Though she is friendly and smart, there is not a single bachelor in her village to win her heart. However, the appearance of Darkhuma of Sekawt village turns her life upside down. Carrying his illegitimate child, the most adorable person of the small hamlet become the most defamed. Being the pride and joy of her parents and brothers, her illicit sexual relationship with a stranger brought in a bad reputation for the family, which is unforgivable. Later on, she, somewhat, manages to nurture her fatherless son Laiawrha through hard times.

In the village, older to Laiawrha is Sakawlhi, an aggressive girl, as the meaning of her name have suggested. She is not liked, looked down upon and remains friendless even when she grew up. In due course, as the fictional narrative proceeds, Laiawrha marry Sakawlhi and together they form a strong alliance strengthening Lungrang family saga. Another character we have come across is Laleni, free frolicking type and quite fine looking. All the village bachelors woo her simply because she is the best favoured. With Laiawrha, they have a thing happening between them that resulted in the birth of Darchhuana, another illegitimate child.

The novel depicted three major women characters in Chhuahthangi, Sakawlhi and Laleni. Their similarity lies in being fallen, disgraced and humiliated. Vungkhami, Kawlsiami and Dari are lesser-dealt women characters found in novel. The union of Laiawrha and Sakawlhi ends with the story.

Lungrang Hmangaihna

Lungrang family story continued in the next episode. Sakawlhi, as a wife having various responsibilities is now a changed person, which surprise everone who knew her childhood. Having no complained she adopts her stepson Darchhuana, the illegitimate child born between Laiawrha and Laleni as her own flesh and blood.

After Sakawlhi gave birth to a girl child, Darkungi, the family shifted to Aizawl with a hope of betterment, and yet they start out scratching from a humble beginning. While Sakawlhi manage a vegetable garden, Chhuahthangi run a shop and Darchhuana is doing fine with his contract work. Soon their individual efforts finally paid off in order to become a decent and successful family in the heart of Aizawl town.

Darkungi half-heartedly married an IAS officer Zochhuana, and settled in the northern part of India. Being a wife of an IAS officer in a strange land and being away too far from her family, Darkungi often find herself in a lonesome tight spot. However, her personal struggle does not hindrances their relationships since she is quick to learn to adapt herself with whatever their circumstances required.

Darchhuana, now well established financially, married an educated person Hazeli, daughter of a widow Hmuakliani. The new couples have a blissful life at the beginning. With Hazeli's involvement in infidelity, their marriage life reaches a zenith stage and slide downward. The 'whoredaughter' of Hazeli was born soon after.

Tales surrounding the fostering of Darsawiveli, Hazeli's daughter is sorrowful and heart touching as pictured in the novel. The never-ending love and care she received from her step-grandparents, Laiawrha and Sakawlhi is indeed helpful. Darchhuana, soon enough wedded their house-maid Mazami. As the family story proceeds, it was discover that Mazami is the grand daughter of Darkhuma's sister. In this sense, Lungrang family structure becomes more compact and tightened.

What we have in the novel is two central characters Sakawlhi and Chhuanthangi, including other women characters like Darkungi, Hazeli and Mazami. Their individual characterization and participation will be explored in the study.

A Na Lua

In the third part of Lungrang family narrative, the central figures occupying the novel is Hazeli and Darchhuana. The novel discusses detailed account of Hazeli, her childhood and upbringing, her new life at Delhi with a new husband, and her tragic death at the hands of her relative-in-law.

Mazami, second wife of Darchhuana, give birth to twins, Darliantuala and Darthangvunga. While Darliantuala is quite a playboy character type, his brother Darthangvunga is precisely his opposite. Darsawiveli stays at both the places of her step-grandfather Laiawra and her grandmother Hmuakliani. The widow Hmuakliani has to look after her two granddaughters Darsawiveli and Cecilia, daughter of Hazeli's brother, who are completely poles apart in their behaviour and manner. Darsawiveli and her half-brother Darthangvunga becomes serious lover. Unfortunately, Darthangvunga passed away just before a child is born between them.

By the end of the novel Darchhuana, along with Hmuakliani and Darsawiveli went to Delhi to meet Hazeli's children. The two central figures in the novel is the mother-daughter duo, Hazeli and Darsawiveli. Even though the personal account of Mazami is not detailed, her part in the novel and in the family structure of Lungrang saga is nevertheless vital. Apart from the three women characters, the role played by Cecilia is equally important.

Makpa Atan

The last episode of Lungrang saga focuses assortment of characters. Hmuakliani have a hectic time of looking after her two fatherless and motherless granddaughters Darsawiveli and Cecilia. Even though she favoured Darsawiveli more, Hmuakliani often acted as a peacemaker between the two quarrelsome teenagers. The real reason behind their heated disagreement lies with the fact that Darsawiveli objected Cecilia flirtation with Darthangvunga's brother

Darliantuala. Cecilia, on her part, is a popular singer and an upcoming star, supported her grandma financially.

The novel explores the family life of Darkungi and her husband Zochhuana, and of their grown-up children. Their daughter Hmangaihi comes home to spend summer with her grandparents and ends her vacation by marrying Nukawi stepson Ropianga. Laiawrha mother Chhuahthangi, with all the good days gone by, went back to Saihum. The godmother of Lunrang saga has passed away peacefully.

Soon after Darsawiveli have a child, it was rumoured that she and Darthangvunga's brother Darliantuala are likely to get marry. Instead, Darliantuala hooked up with Cecilia. The unfortunate story of Darsawiveli continues with her prospect husband Zorama, brother of Hmangaihi. Yet again Zorama marry Zochhuanawmi, daughter of Nukawki instead of her. Subsequently the only alternative available to her is to follow the footstep of her great gran Chhuahthangi by taking care of the illegitimate child of Darthangvunga.

Chapter 1:

From the selected reading of Lalhmingliana Saiawi fictional works, the dissertation attempt to highlight chiefly on women's characters without any strict bending on the theoretical aspect of gender studies, that is to say feminism. Feminism is, according to Oxford Dictionary and Thesaurus (2006), an "advocacy of women's rights and sexual equality" (276). Collins Cobuild English Language Dictionary (1996) step further ahead and put forward that feminism is, "the political belief that women should have the same rights, power, and opportunity that men have, and that the present situation should be changed to give them equality" (526).

Despite the fact that women studies within the scenario of Mizo literature begins to emerge slowly, the kind of women's representation and identity formation the study will address need not necessarily adhere to the above assumptions. While the attempt is to concentrate and highlight women's entity, contemporary feminist reading is often a sight of dispute and contestation. For instance, "a feminist does not necessarily read in order to praise or to blame, to judge or to censor. More commonly she sets out to assess how the text invites its readers, as members of a specific culture, to understand what it means to be a woman or a man, and so encourage them to reaffirm or to challenge existing cultural norms" (Catherine Belsey and Jane Moore 1).

Lalhmingliana Saiawi, a retired Indian Administrative Service officer has sixteen (16) works to his credit, including articles and essays published in literary magazine, journal and daily paper. Half of his works are fiction. He published his first fictional narrative Lunrang Laiawrha in 1993 and his second Lunrang Hmangaihna in 1995. The story of Lunrang family continues in A Na Lua (2002), and his latest work Makpa Atan (2011) is considered as the finale of the Lunrang narration. The Lunrang chronicle is link up in the stories of Nukawki (1995) and Nukawki Fanu (1998) as well.

The 'Lunrang saga', which simply meant the family narrative reflected in Lunrang Laiawrha, Lunrang Hmangaihna, A Na Lua and Makpa Atan begins from one of the chief protagonists Laiawrha's mother Chhuahthangi, spanning the lives and times of her great grandchildren. While elucidating Lunrang family account, the study will also examine the story of Nukawki's family in view of the fact that the two families interweave by means of marriages and locational rootedness. Moreover, the research will be incomplete without referring his other well-known work Keimah Unionliana (1997), since it is not an isolated narration from the intertwining stories of Laiawrha and Nukawki. For that reason alone, characters and circumstances in the novel will also be discuss at random.

Lalhmingliana covers a wide range of familial trait and women's subject, including romance, matrimony, separation, maternity, widowhood, household duty and social obligation in the context of Mizo society during the period of pre and post-independence India. Since women's experiences are far apart from their male counterpart, the objective and intent of the research is to explore the significance and contribution of such characters by means of selective studies.

The position of women as an individual in the family life and social structure is as much as diverse and different in his fictional works, and yet each women character in the narrative contemplated a particular form of representation within the framework of patriarchal society. The attempt is to make a close comparison between places occupy by boy and girl child in the society, their domestic and family duties, socio-religious anticipation towards young women, their responsibility within and outside family sphere, their unequal and marital status, the nature and function of women's individuality, the condition of a fallen woman, so on and so forth. Whether this intricacy makes an impact on contemporary reality will also be discuss.

While discussing differences, women's experiences in Lalhmingliana writings are not solely a function beneath patriarchy but also a function of relationships of power between and among women. Yet, voices of women characters especially in a fictional narrative remain feeble since ages. Having said this, it must be borne in mind that the ultimate objective of the research is one of the key contestation among modern-day feminist readers, thus,

"By this time a good deal of work has been done on language from a feminist point of view, and feminists were becoming aware that it was only women who were likely to chatter, gossip, tittle-tattle, whine, nag or bitch. On the other hand, only men could be virile and potent: there were no female equivalents for these terms of praise. Powerful creatures that they are, men conventionally perform the sexual act, while women are merely involved in sexual relationships. Men, but not women, are entitled to be aggressive or, better, abrasive, and women who protest about it are inclined to be shrill or, worse, strident. But then none of this should surprise us, in view of the asymmetries that have developed between masters and mistresses, wizards and witches, governors and governesses, knights and dames. In each case the word for women has negative meanings or connotations, while the male term consistently implies authority" (Catherine Belsey and Jane Moore 3).

Unlike his contemporary, women characters in Lalhmingliana fiction have a much stronger and profound voices to their male opposite. They are 'materfamilias', that is to say, a female head of a family or a woman described in her role as head of a household. This could be of various reasons: family upbringing, historical circumstances, economical management, opportunity and destiny. To this regard, Elaine Showalter remarks, "women have generally regarded as 'sociological chameleons,' taking on the class, lifestyles, and culture of their male relatives" (14). The whole notion of women's particularity will be address through 'Lungrang saga', Nukawki's narratives and Keimah Unionliana episode.

The novelist Lalhmingliana, without having any formal critical background, has his own idea on creative discourse, which he added in Lungrang Laiawrha 2nd Edition as a supplementary reading. Before examine his personal notion on contemporary novel, to scrutinize various definition on the subject might be useful. A novel, according to a critic is like a play, it "has a plot, and to a great extent its characters reveal themselves and their intentions in dialogue" (B. Prasad 194). This statement further formulates that, "in the novels, the tendency has been to subordinate action to psychology, to find the central theme in the mental and spiritual development of the characters rather than in their physical adventures" (195). RJ Rees also gives his own description, thus, "a fictitious prose narrative of considerable length in which characters and actions representative of real life are portrayed in a plot of more or less complexity" (106).

Seen from this angle, it looks as if there is no coherent conclusion of what the novel really is. Novel, according to R. Lallianzuala is not "a transcript of life, to be judged by its exactitude; but a simplification of some side or point of life, to stand or exactitude but by its significant simplicity." He further stresses that, "the interpretation of human life by means of fictitious narrative in prose. The object of the novel is human life" (161).

Contemporary definition on the exactness of a novel is impossible owing to its fluidity since the effort offer different meaning and sometimes, contradictory definition. Lalhmingliana is quite enthusiastic in this regard, according to him "there is a general assumption that novel is a mere work of deliberately false and improbable account. It is not so! It conformity is as much as a reality and actuality to biography, autobiography and historical account. While biographical work on any individual is vulnerable to side-line the controversial part of the person's life story, it is not so in creative writing."

Lalhmingliana further stresses that, "a novel, having the typical feature, involves many real life characters and tells a story about characters in conflict or expresses an emotion or idea. It also tells a complex story by placing characters in a number of different thought provoking and real world situations, which often stimulate the reader's interest to identify themselves based on such situations." In this sense, fiction represents extra human reality and actuality.

Contemporary writers have pushed traditional literary boundaries so that the characteristics of many types of literature overlap, but looking at certain differences between fiction and other literary forms can give readers an essential guide to its unique traits. Fiction tells a story, but unlike other genre, it presents more than an episode. The novelist has the freedom to develop plot, characters, and theme at will. The novelist can also manipulate the main plot with numerous shifts in time, place, and focus of interest.

Lalhmingliana maintained a particular strong theme in his works. He himself stresses that, "In the year 1997, September, I deliberately wrote a male influenced novel ['mipa novel'] titled Keimah Unionliana 1997, a story of a lover and a married life. Sex, which bonded a married couple, must be mentioned regularly..." The manners in which he has projected his 'sex theme' are often misread and overestimate as pornographically intended. Since he accepts as true in the fictional representation of human reality, he dramatizes what he think fit, rather than what other felt.

Lunrang story set in motion during the colonial period, in a remote place of Saihum where modern influences hardly reach the village folks. The chief and his council of elders administered its rustic life. Agrarian way of life and economy is their sole livelihood, and richness is measure by means of agricultural production. As usual, young and old alike admire fair and lovely maiden, and Chhuahthangi was one such example. The villagers' outlook was so limited that bachelors who went for the Second World War campaign, when returned they are garlanded and ultimately become the pride of this small hamlet.

The elementary school set up in the village through the influences of Christian missionaries was look down upon with a mixture of curiosity and resentment. Most parents are reluctant in sending their children due to one reason or another. Though harassed and mocked at, a handful of early Christians stood firm in accepting the white man's religion. Whereas, major characters who are simple folks are uneducated and almost all the Lungrang stories rarely mentioned their religious faith though church going and prayer are refer occasionally. Saihum bachelors were reactive in protecting the village's unmarried woman against travellers, which is a common unwritten custom mostly everywhere at that time.

This is the very picture in which one of the central narrators of the Lungrang saga, Laiawrha was born and brought up by his unfortunate mother, the fallen maiden Chhuahthangi. The opening episode Lungrang Laiawrha covers the transformation of fatherless Laiawrha from boyhood to adulthood, his marriage life with the chief narrator Sakawlhi and his sexual affairs with Laleni. The family migrated to Aizawl in the next episode Lungrang Hmangaihna. Here, they begin to prosper due to the courageous and fearless nature of Sakawlhi through hard work and strength of mind, especially going through the hectic times of the independent movement of 1966.

Lungrang saga continues in A Na Lua, where we find the family who have migrated from the small hamlet of Saihum become a well to do family in Aizawl. In Makpa Atan, the last episode of Lungrang saga, most of the key characters are now the third generation, the grandchildren and great grandchildren of Laiawrha and Sakawlhi. The flow of narration in Makpa Atan is now comparable to contemporary lifestyles. Even though the family structure has been change by modern advancement, socio-political and cultural transitions hardly find a place in the family narration. The modern family of Lungrang saga differs from earlier traditional form, and yet, its functions, composition, and the roles of husbands and wives are still the central topic in Makpa Atan.

Reading Lalhmingiana provides an insightful analysis of woman's individuality and their empowerment, their family and home formation, tradition and modernity through the eyes of his fictitious characters. Therefore, this study attempt to explore elements that shape Lungrang saga with the view to illuminating certain important aspects of Lalhmingiana's creative works. This in turn may be able to clarify some ambiguities in women's characterization.

Chapter 1 is introductory in nature and gives a general overview of the novelist idea on fiction in comparison with others. It also addresses the original formation of the Lungrang saga, the time and space occupy by the family, the social structure of their period and its transitional stages.

Chapter 2:

The Chapter deals various sequence of Lungrang saga by means of an in-depth study on selected characters, it also explore the distinguishing features of their personality and function in their own family story.

The fallen disgrace of Chhuahthangi, the most beautiful damsel of Saihum hamlet was due to an unanticipated incident with Darkhuma of Sekawt village. Though humiliating in the eye of the community, this is the commencement of the lengthy love story extending to generation after generation. Chhuahthangi look after her fatherless son Laiawrha while fighting various adversity and hardship at the same time, this in turn depicted the firm convictions in her personality as a woman.

In the village, one of the future dominant voices of Lungrang saga was Sakawlhi, older to Laiawrha, a fearsome and friendless girl child. Her mother Vungkhami is a character of impudent behaviour; this could be one good reason why her daughter remains companionless even in her adulthood. Unlike Sakawlhi, another unmarried young woman Laleni is popular, admired and wooed at, including Laiawrha. Laiawrha is the first bachelor to courted Sakawlhi, which is the turning point in the life and time of his future other half. In Lungrang Laiawrha, the three female characters: Chhuahthangi, Sakawlhi and Laleni equally share an important place but not their role assigned to, which is unequal and imbalanced.

Each one of them has gone through an unmarried sexual experienced leading to humiliation of some sort. As such is the case, the attempt of this dissertation is to unearth whether the root of their scandal is accidental or choice. In Lungrang saga, the general attitude towards women might be less apparent, and yet it is visible that their male counterpart treats women one-sidedly. Deprivation of a particular kind leading to degradation to women is a common posture created by their opposite.

In Lungrang Hmangaihna, Laiawrha and Sakawlhi after getting married leave Saihum for Aizawl seeking a better pasture. In accordance with customary responsibility, Sakawlhi look after her stepson Darchhuana as her own. Darchhuana was the illegitimate offspring of playboy Laiawrha and Laleni, the village maiden. In the novel, the episode of Darkungi, born between Laiawrha and Sakawlhi was presented comprehensively. The characterization of Darkungi might be one of the most interesting chapters in the novel. A heart rendering moments is repeatedly highlight. It is indeed acceptable to assert their family as ‘family of love and affection,’ where women characters take a leading role in their familial relationship through thick and thin.

In the novel, we have seen Chhuahthangi’s ceaseless love for Darkhuma, Sakawlhi’s role of tightening Lungrang family, Darkungi’s eventual love for her husband Zochhuana whom she had married against her will. In addition, we have seen Hazeli who married a well to do husband and then shattered their marriage life due to her adultery. The novel regularly highlighted Darchhuana, explicit mention of his adulterous wife Hazeli, about his second wife Mazami and their children.

Darsawiveli, an illegitimate child of Hazeli’s two-timing relationship, affectionateness for Darhangvunga is heart touching. The portrayal of Hazeli is quite different unlike the other female members of Lungrang saga. Her dilemma is her own doing, which in turn put together the story elevating and her part pitiful. Looking from the angle of Darsawiveli, of her personal conflict and of her mother death, of her step brother Darhangvunga’s child she carried and of his sudden death, all suggested the title of the novel imbibe in Darsawiveli’s predicament.

Out of the three novels observed in Lungrang story, most of the misfortune and affliction are face by women characters single-handedly. The chapter will address every available specific reason, if there is any as such.

After A Na Lua comes Makpa Atan. Characters in this novel are direct descendant of the original saga, Lungrang Laiawrha. We come across a particular character Cecilia, daughter of Hazeli's brother, and of her grandmother Pi Hmuaki who attempt to arrange her partner, and eventually married Darliantuala, son of Darchhuana. We also come across the family build by Zochhuana and Darkungi, of their daughter Hmangaihi matrimony with Ropianga, son of Lianhawla from his first wife, and of their son Zorama's spousal relationship with Zochhuanawmi, daughter of Nukawki and Lianhawla. This is the situation in which, the other family story created by Lalhmingliana colligates with Lungrang saga.

The chapter will conduct detailed study on major women characters such as Chhuahthangi, the chief initiator of Lungrang story, her daughter-in-law Sakawlhi, Darchhuana's mother Laleni, Darchhuana's wife Hazeli, Darkungi, daughter of Laiawrha and Sakawlhi, and Hazeli's illegitimate child Darsawiveli. Minor characters like Lianawka's wife Dari, Laiawrha grandmother Tuahi, Sakawlhi's mother Vungkhami, Cecilia and Mazami will also be mentioned at random.

Chapter 3:

Chapter 3 will explore various characters in relationship with their social life, the unequal status branded to women within the scenario of patriarchal society.

It is a common trend that men possess the headship of their family. It does not mean that women are blocked from raising their voices in household matters and if at all, however, they were lightly taken. Right from the very beginning of Lungrang family story until the end, socio-political changes have taken place and yet, it neither improves nor worsens the participation of women characters.

Chhuahthangi, due to her elegant personality was both the pride of her suitors and her family. Sadly, her position completely changes overnight. Carrying an illegitimate child turns the tide within her family, especially her father and brothers turns against her even after the birth of the misbegotten child, Laiawrha. Based from this reflection, men do not consider them as their equal. In spite of the fact that men who were involved in illegitimate relationships are not judged disgraceful as done to women. This is one form of gender inequality twisted in patriarchal influence society.

Similarly, the fallen damsels Laleni, though friendly to village bachelors and married men alike, she is never seriously admired literally. For instance, a married man forcefully tried to spoil her when opportunity arises. To put it plainly, this is how men make out women in their mind's eye.

Though friendly to all the bachelors in her youthfulness, Laleni dreams of giving her chastity only to her husband and yet her view of morality with respect to sexual relations is not understood by any of her wooers. 'Friendly to all the bachelors' does not imply having a playful behaviour intended to arouse sexual interest, or being a seductive woman who uses her sex appeal to exploit men. Instead, it entails being intelligent and knowledgeable person. However, no one cares to look that direction and even Laiawrha disparage her to become his wife.

On the other hand, Sakawlhi, being a bully type and fight boys of her age during her childhood, is also disdained up to her maturity by the village bachelors. She remains friendless quite a long time. It is easy to judge others from their bygone days rather than looking at what they have become now. Her childhood aggressiveness is one source that lack respect accompanied by a feeling of intense dislike. Nevertheless, her ferociousness is not something nurtured by others, on the contrary it is something inborn. Her mother-in-law and others, which lead to confusion, misconceived the way she looks after her stepson Darchhuana. It was due solely to her sharp thinking, amid her mother-in-law's objection that the family migrated to Aizawl. In addition, she banishes Darchhuana's wife Hazeli from their family home in the presence of her husband Laiawrha and her in-law Chhuahthangi. Her righteousness often wins in the end.

Thangtinchhuahi's behaviour is thought provoking. Will Mizo society become more chaotic if there is no gender difference in our community? Since diversity in nature is part of human entity, the position of Mizo women is impossible to judge based on the single characterization of Thangtinchhuahi. Impossible because opposite her is Darkungi, who stand firmly in her every circumstance due to the fact that her husband treated her as his own equal. Darkungi do not have any sort of malignity against her husband, instead her ethical and moral principles boost her husband reputation.

Chapter 4:

Women's experiences are far apart from their male counterpart, the objective and intent of this Chapter is to explore the factor and end result of a specified problems.

The fallen maiden Chhuahthangi have an illegitimate child. Among the village bachelors, there is not a single soul whom she admires and adores literally. Sekawt bachelor and playboy Darkhuma was a different case, it was a kind of love at first sight to her. To ooze out her feelings is unquestionable; tradition did not allow her to reveal such affection. Therefore, her disgrace, to be precise is rather intentional and not accidental.

Public opinion injected in Chhuahthangi's dilemma reveals gender unequal practised in our social formation. While no one blames her lover Darkhuma, she receives all the blame she can handle to the extent of what she cannot handle. Nobody condemn and discredit Laiawrha who have sexual affairs with Laleni, one week before he wed Sakawlhi.

Sakawlhi is also fallen but unlike Chhuahthangi and Laleni, not disgraced. In fact, she is more than happy because she willingly gives herself to the only person who treats her as a grown-up and then befriended her. It is not an act of lechery; it is pride for the friendless and loverless Sakawlhi who have a long history of ferocious girlhood. It is an act of self-discovery, of pure courtship, a turning point in the life and time of Sakawlhi.

In the case of the frolicsome Laleni, she enjoys her freedom, taking full advantages of her popularity and attractiveness. It is not surprising that a married man once try his luck to seduce her. Instead of amending herself, she chases her popularity in the face of her numberless admirers, including the opportune looking Laiawrha. Such was her moral weaknesses, the path which lead to her scandal is her own making.

Hazeli, with her mother Hmuakiani's foresight and her own beauty, tie the knot with Darchhawna, the most riches bachelor of Aizawl town. Instead of consolidating her new position, strangely she treads the road of adultery leading to her downfall. She is one of the most peculiar characters observe in Lunrang family saga. There is no one to show her the right path, it is clear, also that, she does not have any moral ambition. More over, Hazeli often belittled her mother-in-law Sakawlhi; she used to sneers at visiting relatives from her husband's village.

The interesting event in the characteristic of Darkungi commences only just ahead of her matrimony. Even though her marriage with Zochhuana, IAS officer was purely arranged, she never took it for granted to demonstrate her displeasure or discontentment. Her changing attitude towards her husband, which in turn improved their relationship, is one of the touching moments in their story.

Coming to Darsawiveli the most heart-breaking character of Lungrang saga, she finds herself in a very awkward dilemma ever since her birthhood. Her grandparents love and concern could not simply rub off being the ‘whoredaughter’ of Hazeli. This affected her life miserably. Her love for her half-brother Darthangvunga suggests certain meaning and purpose in her individual portrayal. She needs someone to ease her unobtrusiveness and help her out from her personal conflict. Therefore, anyone, relative or not, who comprehend her situation is precious at all cost.

Darsawiveli mental attitude and that of her granny Sakawlhi are identical. Never admire by the community, Sakawlhi nonetheless take pride in carrying the illegitimate child of Laiawrha. As discussed before, the child she carries is not the outcome of whoredom. The innocent nature seen in Sakawlhi reflected in Darsawiveli character as well. Being in love with her brother Darthangvunga, the situation in which Darsawiveli helplessly put herself is indeed difficult to deal with. Helpless, because hiding their illicit relationship is beyond her control.

In Lungrang Laiawrha story, the beliefs, feelings and values shown towards female characters already existed in patriarchal mindset, since the foundation of social organization is project through the male line. If they ever cross that line, their good name and reputation are quickly charged with malicious intent. Women are expected to be obedient and loyal in nature, and they are not provided any spaces to raise their voices. Their community and family try to dictate their feelings and action, and yet it could not do so in the typical case of Chhuahthangi.

Chapter 5:

The last chapter summarizes the interpretations put forth from Chapter 2 to Chapter 4. Certain findings are made while exploring Lungrang saga as display below.

Based on close reading of Lungrang Laiawrha, Lungrang Hmangaihna, A Na Lua and Makpa Atan, of women characters who play the central role in the family narrative met various form of crucial problems. The problems in most cases are natures design, especially the natural phenomenon of dying. For instance, while Chhuahthangi received ill-treatment due to her fallen shame, Darkhuma, without knowing that she carries his unborn child dies in big game hunting. Darsawiveli, whose personality was as pitiful as her upbringing was unfortunate enough because of the sudden death of Darthangvunga, the only hope she have. Likewise, Dari, the second wife of Lianawka who brings her husband family to Christianity dies in childbirth. It is obvious that there death is beyond human control, it is the natural order of things.

Secondly, there are problems that are nurture and fabricated. Laleni, the belle of Saihum village, lost the opportunity of getting married with her suitor, Laiawrha. It is the doing of self-willed and blinded judgment made by her. Darchhuana’s wife Hazeli had every girl’s dreams, a supportive and loveable husband, with an abundance of material possessions, and yet she ruins herself by committing adultery. The ignorance of Lianawka’s love by Thangtinchhuahi leads to nothing except divorce. She could have become the most respectful woman at Saihum, but she herself blew it away. Vanlalruatlawki of Keimah Unionliana novel too simply could not adapt herself with her husband's family and confused everyone instead.

Human being is capable of creating and becoming imperfect. Belittling instead of offering a helping hand never helps particularly in the context of woman's entity. Being a weaker sex, it added insult to more injury upto mental and emotional level, especially in the case of Sakawlhi before Laiawrha step forward.

Problems often create victims. If the victim belongs to the lower section of society, the whole problem becomes more burdensome. To lessen the pain of suffering, doors should be unlocked and gates must be unchained. Their space of comfort is often transformed into discomfort zone due to human cruelty and ignorance. In such a situation, gender biased should be overlooked, humanity and kindness alone helps. To heal the pain - warmheartedness, sympathy, goodwill, compassion and comprehension are important factors.

The above assumption is evitable as Lungrang saga teaches us. The fallen and disgrace women characters are given a platform to raise their voiceless voices. Such chances are available by means of sincere humanity. It is not possible to lessen all the burden face by women, at least understanding alone decrease such burden. Since their experience of predicament is different to their male counterpart, the turmoil inside their subconscious mind in turn reveals their authentic behaviour. Such authenticity builds a better world, a liveable atmosphere and their right to claim opportunity.

A mixture of women characters in Lungrang saga has different quality and upbringing as well as divergent mental attitude. Their similarity lies in having a share experience of being a woman, a situation of misalliance, and often treated as if being a second-class citizen in a male predominant society. The manner in which each characters withstand such forces and the way in which each relate such experiences within their personal sphere remain poles apart. This could be of various reasons: fabricated circumstances, individual privileges, and most importantly nature's design.
